Argument

16.10-16.40

It seems reasonable that due to no Palean boats found, we can conclude that the so-called Palean baskets were not uniquely Palean. However, as far as I'm concerned, this summary needs more evidence, and the fact mentioned above is far from enough to demonstrate such opinion.

First and foremost, it can't be excluded that those baskets may float to the other side of the Brim River, which needs no boat at all. Secondly, if we want to argue that such baskets were not uniquely Palean, the connection between the woven baskets, especially the distinctive pattern, and people in Lithos is necessary. Because only by the finding of one basket, it is hardly to say that such baskets were created by Lithos people. Also, once we figure out the relationship between the pattern and Lithos people, we can even deduce that those baskets were original in Lithos. Moreover, there exists possibility that Palean people had other transportation, which has not been discovered yet, helping the one basket 'swim' to the other side.

All in all, the evidence above is prerequisite before we draw this conclusion, and somewhat is the most significant during the whole process.
